I spent a fun and informative afternoon interviewing John Lin about his background, teaching career, extensive Shakespearean studies, and the joy of learning he shares with the attendees in the Shakespeare group that he leads at the Meredith Public Library.

John revealed an interesting paradox. In his words, "I was a terrible English student in high school and I tell my high school English students that all the time to motivate them and inspire them to recognize at one stage of one's life, you might not be interested in something, but later on, a lot can change."

That was certainly true in John's case. After flirting with both pre-med and philosophy as college majors, he eventually found an appreciation of literature and earned an undergraduate degree in English which led to teaching in a private school in Connecticut. During summers there, he earned a master's degree in English.

Through a professor in that master's program, John was introduced to a program at Oxford University in England where he got to spend an additional three years studying Shakespeare full time. The program was located a mere 40 minutes away from Shakespeare's birthplace, Stratford-upon-Avon, which is also the home of the Royal Shakespeare Company. John would go there to attend plays. After the shows, he would visit the Dirty Duck Pub and interact with the actors (often still in costume) he'd just seen on stage.

Our discussion turned towards the Shakespeare group at the library. John said, "It's been one of the joys of my retirement!" He explained further that it was also completely unplanned. When he originally proposed the idea of a Shakespeare class at the library several years ago, John thought they would just tackle one or two plays, starting with Hamlet. Over twenty people showed up that first day. The group has been so successful that they have declared a goal to go through the entire Shakespearean repertoire.

They are well on their way to succeeding. Members of the group are so enthusiastic that John led several of them on a trip to England so they could see the plays performed in the same area they first debuted hundreds of years ago.

What is a typical session at the library like? The group covers one act per week so each play takes five weeks. John explains, "We sometimes watch several versions of the same scene. We do a lot of reading out loud so we want to get the words and the texts in our bodies. We want to feel how these words sound saying them to somebody else." The sessions run on Wednesdays from 1 PM to 2:30 PM. No background in Shakespeare is necessary. The current play is always available at the desk for $5.

To hear the complete audio interview (including Shakespearean controversies, favorite quotes, iambic pentameter, and Matthew's infamous sonnet as well as many more details of John's stories than we have room for in this article), please visit the library website at www.MeredithLibrary.org and look for Episode #31 (Part 1) and Episode #32 (Part 2) of the Check It Out library podcast. From the library homepage, follow this path: click on News & Events...Meredith Library Podcast Studio...Check It Out. You can also ask at the circulation desk and we can show you several ways to find the podcast.

Genealogy at the Library

The Meredith Public Library meets the third Tuesday of each month from 4:00-5:00PM, except in December. Various topics are discussed. If you would like to be added to the mailing list, please email erin@meredithlibrary.org.

The library is a Family Search Library Affiliate. When you log into familysearch.org using the library's wifi, you will have access to 40% more records than you can access from home. The library also hosts Ancestry.com, thanks to the generosity of the Friends of the Meredith Library. We also subscribe to American Ancestors, with access to numerous databases focusing on New England, but also other areas. Both of these databases must be used in house.

We host several Genealogy Lock-Ins each year when you can use the library after hours for research. Our next one is Friday, January 16 from 5:00-8:00PM.
